Industry Insights: Rising Demand for Premium Ingredients and Cuisine

The growing demand for international cuisine and premium ingredients has been a defining trend in global food culture. According to a Euromonitor International report, the global fine food market is projected to reach a value of $1.2 trillion by 2027, growing at an annual rate of 5.4%. This increasing preference for high-quality, authentic ingredients is mirrored in India, where the gourmet food sector is seeing impressive growth. Research and Markets estimates that the Indian gourmet food market will expand at a compound annual growth rate (CAGR) of 20.5% from 2023 to 2028, driven by rising incomes and a growing appetite for premium, internationally sourced products.

As Indian cuisine evolves, chefs and consumers are experimenting with cross-cultural flavors, combining traditional Indian recipes with global ingredients. From Italian truffles to Japanese matcha, international ingredients are becoming integral to the Indian culinary experience. This openness to global influences presents a unique opportunity to redefine local gastronomy, with fine foods playing a key role in this gastronomic revolution.
